

Atmospheric Perspective - also called Aerial perspective, refers to the effect the atmosphere has on the appearance of an object as it is viewed from a distance. As the distance between an object and a viewer increases, the contrast between the object and its background decreases, and the contrast of any markings or details within the object also decreases.

Contrast and detail decreases with distance

The same type of change in contrast is present at night.